

see you turn it to account. That's about the style of blessing we inherit now-a-days; however, my secret of life in this, everything has a culminating point, and the dodge is to hit upon it yourself and bring others to it, with the least delay possible; in these four words—come to the point—is embodied the whole philosophy of existence.

"Well, yes, I dare say there's something in it," returned Coverdale, meditatively, "it never exactly struck me before, but there's a beautiful simplicity about it that I rather admire—a little too rail-roadish, perhaps, unless a man's in an awful hurry; you know the bright sunny peeps and the jolly old road-side ale-houses of life, by rushing so straight at your object."

"Sunny noisiness," was the uncourteous rejoinder—"none of your old slow-coaching days for me; life's not long enough for dreaming—Pur's life pills are a swindle, and Mathew's died without leaving his recipe behind him; so come to the point say I."

"Though I won't promise to adopt your philosophy for a permanent, I'll act upon it for once, at all events," replied Coverdale, smiling, (and a nice genial pleasant smile it was too, showing a white even row of teeth, and lighting up the eyes and making the 'smile' look particularly handsome).

"So to come to the point, I'm here to enlist you in my service for what the women call 'a day's shopping' tomorrow; I've no clothes to my back, no horses to ride, no dog-cart to knock about in—in fact none of the necessities of life;—then, having benefited by your advice and assistance, to carry you off to Coverdale for a crack at the rabbits; thank goodness they've got the game up, and the poachers down, since I've been abroad, that was the only thing I made a row about when I came into the property. Why there are no preserves like the Coverdale woods in the county, and yet my poor uncle never had a pheasant on his table. Things are rather different now, my boy, and my only real sorrow at the present moment is, that there are two whole months to be got rid of before the first of September; and now what do you say?"

"Done along with you," replied Hazlehurst; "but on one condition only, viz, that when we've had a touch at the rabbits, you'll come on with me to the Grange, and make acquaintance with those members of the worthy family of Hazlehurst, whose virtues are yet unknown to you."

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

KNOCKED DOWN BY A CARRIAGE.—Yesterday morning about 9 o'clock, as a little daughter of Mr. George Ward, about 9 years of age was crossing Broad Street, she was knocked down by a horse, recklessly driven by a young lad named John P. Sherman, son of Thomas B. Sherman, of Middletown. Her escape from serious injury, is not from instant death, was most remarkable, the horse's feet just clearing her on one side, and the carriage wheels on the other. Those who witnessed the transaction, aver that the lad Sherman is deserving of the severest censure for the reckless manner in which he drove through the streets.

FISH BY THE TON.—We saw, yesterday afternoon, unloading from a fishing-boat at Long Wharf, about a ton of blue-fish, trapped yesterday near Seacomet, whither they had gone to spawn. These fish were shipped to New York last night, where they retail readily at 10 cents per pound. Trap and seine fishing is ruining the book fishing of Newport, and will in time, if not abolished, spoil the fisheries entirely. We hope the matter will be looked after by our Representatives at the coming session of the Assembly.

Newport was enveloped again yesterday in a maul of fog, which, for a portion of the day, the eye could not penetrate the distance of more than two hundred yards. It lifted, however, towards the close of the day, sufficiently to allow of people going abroad without danger of being lost. Pocket compasses were in demand the early part of the day.

Copies of the Daily News of yesterday were in great demand, and several hundred anxious individuals were disappointed of obtaining them. All the regular subscribers were served, as usual. Men may possibly learn, after a little more experience on such occasions, that the only sure method of obtaining a copy of this paper when most wanted, is to subscribe and have it sent regularly to their address.

NEW COAL YARD.—John W. Davis, Esq., has leased Bennett's Wharf, in this city, for the term of five years, and is fitting it up for a coal yard. Messrs. Olan and Bradford are also extending their business, having leased Perry Mill Wharf for that purpose.

RESPECT TO THE DEAD.—A praiseworthy feature in the institutions of Newport, is the respect shown to the dead by its citizens. The remains of Mr. Record were followed to their last resting place yesterday by some two hundred persons, in carriages and on foot, a large portion of whom were ladies.

IF There will be an meeting in the "Central Church" on the ensuing Sabbath, the repairs not being completed. Services in the Chapel will be held as usual at 9 A. M., 11-2 and 7-12 in the evening.

THURSDAY CHURCH.—This church will not be opened on Sunday next, as 'he repairs on it are not yet completed.

The Revolution in Tuscany.

FLORENCE, April 27, 1859.

Florence has this day been the scene of a drama hitherto perhaps unknown in the world—a bloodless revolution. A week since the throne of the Grand Duke seemed no more impregnable than that of some Italian potentate in times of popular commotion; for the last few days, however, the excitement has been gradually rising among all classes, turning to know the course the Grand Duke intended to pursue in the now inevitable struggle. The procrastination of the Court has vastly increased this feeling, and, though a week since a declaration of neutrality might possibly have checked for the moment the passions of the people, it was felt throughout yesterday that nothing short of an immediate decision in favor of Piedmont could prevent a popular demonstration, which could have but one issue.

Gen. Farini, the head of the Tuscan forces, yesterday sent in his resignation, while bands of soldiers and citizens paraded the streets singing patriotic songs and mingling the names of Victor Emmanuel and Italian independence. Throughout the day emissaries of the National party might be seen posting up addresses to the citizens in the most public manner, urging them to throw off the yoke of Austria and rise in behalf of Italian independence. At an early hour this morning the people (to the number of 20,000) assembled in the Piazza Santa Maria Antica. Here the tricolor of Italy was raised amid rapturous acclamations, and bands of men of all classes, soldiers and citizens, dispersed themselves in every direction, each trooped by a bearer of the national standard. In less than an hour the tricolor was floating over the tower of the Palazzo Vecchio and the fortresses of San Giorgio and San Giovanni. The greater portion of the assembly proceeded at once to the palace of the French Minister, who thanked the people for their sympathy with the Emperor and France. They then proceeded to the Sardinian Ambassador's. Amid a thousand cries and the waving of banners he presented himself to the people, reminding them that the eyes of Italy and Piedmont were upon them, exhorted them to respect religion, law, and property, and recommended discipline to the army, quiet and order to all. "The moment will come," he exclaimed, "may, is now at hand, when you will be called upon to employ your arms in defense of your country." He next announced that the Grand Duke had declared his intention of abandoning Tuscany, demanded in the name of Victor Emmanuel and the national honor that respect should be paid him, and trusted that the citizens would obey the Government that should be organized to meet the present emergency. He then disclaimed on the part of Sardinia any intention of interfering in the affairs of Tuscany, further than to provide for the public tranquility and the exigencies of war. The object for which Piedmont drew the sword was independence, not ambition. Let them all remember that liberty was only acquired by great sacrifices, by acts of virtue and entire obedience. Under these circumstances, the Grand Duke at an early hour called upon Don Neri Corsini, Marquis of Lejatis, to aid his counsels. On his declaring that abdication in favor of his son was the only course that could save the succession, the Grand Duke summoned the corps diplomatique and declared that he preferred quitting the country to condescending to this step. Before the public announcement of this, the scene before the Palazzo Pitti was most exciting. The very guards and servants of the Grand Duke had mounted the tricolor, while thousands were moving to and fro across the Grand Piazza. The most important fact was the perfect command which the leaders of the people seemed to possess over each and all. They might be seen going from group to group, recommending order and tranquillity. Throughout the entire day no single act of turbulence occurred, as far as I have been able to discover. The cause of this can only be found in the entire unanimity of the people in their hatred of Austria, which, so far from being confined to Lombardy and Piedmont, is universal throughout the Peninsula. Before 4 in the afternoon it was known that the Grand Duke would quit Tuscany with all his family rather than abdicate in favor of the Hereditary Archduke. An address was immediately issued to the people, declaring that Leopold II., though his opinions coincided with those of Tuscany, was on the point of abandoning his country a second time, with all his family. In order to avoid allowing the country to run the risk of a state of anarchy, a Junta was in process of formation, which, without wishing in any way to influence the future, would undertake to maintain order, and give up its authority at the earliest possible moment. In the mean time, the wishes of the army of Tuscany would be satisfied, and the Dictatorship of Tuscany offered to Victor Emmanuel during the war. Gen. Ulloa, it continued, the illustrious defender of Venice, was already on his way to Florence, sent by the King of Piedmont. The Tuscan army would be proud to find him at its head. After an exhortation to order, the first and most solemn act of patriotism, the address wound up with the statement that the names of the Provisional Government would be given at the earliest moment.

At 8 the Grand Duke, with his family and a band of officers (to see him safely to the frontier), left Florence by the Porta Romana, and, crossing the iron bridge above the city, made the circuit of the walls, and followed the road to Bologna from the Porta San Gallo. At 11 o'clock the most perfect tranquillity reigned throughout the city.

New Shoreham.

MR. EDITOR:—In my last communication to you, I was expecting a messenger from the coast, with intelligence from the dories engaged in the fishing business. He arrived the next morning and reported the fishermen doing well, as far as the catching of fish was concerned. But, said he, there was an old and experienced fisherman, whose looks at once told that he had weathered the storms of at least seventy winters; who on reaching the shore openly proclaimed, and called on his brother fishermen and all others to take notice, that within six months there would be war between this and some other nation. I inquired the reason for his belief, supposing the aforesaid ancient fisherman had, while out at sea, spoken some frigate or other man-of-war belonging to some foreign nation, likely with an ambassador on board with despatches to the seat of government, and that they had likely taken prisoners some one or two of the old man's crew to create a disturbance in these waters. The reply of the old fisherman was, that he founded his opinion on the circumstance of the codfish approaching the coast from the eastward and the dogfish from the westward. And the old man further remarked to my informant, that he nor his father never knew it to fail, that where dog and cod fish take these opposite directions in the spring of the year, war soon follows. This announcement was the cause of no little alarm, till it was understood that the old man was no fisherman at all, nor even a native of the Island, being no other than old farmer B., on a short visit here, who had been out fishing with a friend and become seasick and dizzy headed, so much so that he thought all the day that the sun rose in the west that morning, and that the codfish the fishermen caught were coming from the opposite direction:

Westbury, R. I.

MR. EDITOR:—Your canvasser being here a few days since, handed me two or three copies of your excellent paper and requested me occasionally to send you communications for publication therein, and thus keep your readers informed in relation to affairs as they occur in this portion of the State, and I promised to do so.

Your readers, generally, I presume are sufficiently posted up as to the locality, size, population, &c., of this place, to preclude the need of occupying space to dwell on these points; but there may be a few, not favored with such knowledge, for whose particular information I will merely and briefly state that Pawcatuck will be about four miles from the ocean, and pleasantly located on both sides of the river Pawcatuck, whence it derives its name—one part being in the town of Westerly, and the other in Stonington, (Ct.) It is likewise situated on the Prov. and Stonington Railroad, five miles from Stonington Point. It contains some 5000 inhabitants. Should I get time, I may in some future letters notice some of the most prominent objects of interest in this section of the Narragansett country.

Miss Emma Hardinge, the popular lecturer on Spiritualism, who commands the attention and admiration of cultivated minds of all classes, whether believers or not in the peculiar doctrines she advances, recently delivered three lectures in this village. This lady, though she lectures with her eyes open and apparently in a normal state, professes to speak under the control of spirits; and in order to convince the people that her discourses are spontaneous, and result from some other intelligence than her own mind, she always requests her audience to appoint a committee to select a subject for elucidation, subsequent to her coming on the platform. The subjects chosen for her here are the following:—"The Origin and Destiny of Man;" "The Origin of Physical and Moral Evil;" and "Religion and Spiritualism." All who listened to her in this village, whatever they think of her opinions, admit that her discourses were rare productions of ability, beauty, and eloquence. She treated the subjects given her in the most consecutive manner, each of her positions being stated with remarkable clearness and logical precision. Her discourses were characterized by profound scientific knowledge and deep historical research, and abounded with the most beautiful analogies, similitudes and illustrations, that I ever heard. Questions put to her by individuals in the audience in relation to various subjects, were answered without the least hesitation, and with a beauty and definiteness of expression that charmed all who heard her. While I could see no indication that the lady was but an oracle enunciating the words of another intelligence, I must confess that for extent and variety of knowledge, amplitude of thought, force and fitness of illustration, enchantment of eloquence and perfection of elocution, the lectures of Miss Hardinge surpass any that I ever listened to. I intended when I sat down this afternoon, to give you a synopsis of her lectures, but it would make this communication too long.

Last Monday Nixon & Co.'s Circus was here. In the forenoon forty horses were driven through the streets by one woman. In the afternoon and evening a vast multitude of people assembled to witness the performance. I understand that another Circus will be here a few weeks hence. The Manufacturing Co.'s are decidedly opposed to their coming here, as they draw their help from the Mills, much to the inconvenience of the employers.

Last Monday was also a day on which a sad accident occurred, a few miles from this village. Captain Simon Haley, of Mystic, an old man 77 years of age, accompanied by his little daughter, was walking across the bridge at Palmer's Cove, between Mystic and New London, when the Express train came thundering along, and before he could get off the bridge he was struck by the engine and instantly killed. The little girl hearing the whistle, jumped into the water and saved her life.

Nothing more occurs to me worth communicating to you. We are having fine weather since the "May storm" of last week. The grass, the plants, and the flowers all whisper their thanks for it.

YOUTH PURSUING TIER STUDIES.

The number of students now attending the Unitarian and Universalist colleges in the United States is 564; in the Episcopal, 722; in the Roman Catholic, 1,075; in the Methodist, 1,379; in the Baptist, 1,528; in the Congregational, 1,858; in the Presbyterian, 5,482; making a total of 12,608 in the various stages of their collegiate course in 122 of the colleges of the country. In the various high schools, free academies, polytechnic institutions, there are probably as many more, making about 25,000 in the higher classical institutions. About 30,000 young ladies are supposed to be connected with the female seminaries. In the seventeen law schools there are 937 students; in the forty medical schools there are 4,765 students; in the forty-nine theological schools there are 1,504 students.—National Recorder.

Two Germans, in attempting to go from Spirit Lake to Sioux City, Iowa, recently got lost, and were out on the prairie without food six days and six hours. They endured the hardships wonderfully, although one of them had his feet badly frozen.
